

The Passenger (The Native Series Book 1)

A sigh of The Great Gatsby, a gasp of Titanic, and a squirt of The Inbetweeners. - The West Somerset Knitters Guild

Seventeen year old convent schoolgirl Mary Lloyd has burnt her bridges in England. Failing her final set of exams, helping herself to a priceless heirloom from the safe, smashing her mothers lovers windscreen and running away from home. Tiptoeing across the roofs in the middle of the night, Mary embarks on a journey, taking her from Cheltenham Spa halfway around the world. Back to her home in Ceylon and her childhood sweetheart, Dani Fernando. Back to her father again. We join Mary at Southampton docks, face freshly painted, waiting to board The Orientana. Travelling under the borrowed identity of Mavis Biggleswade, Mary finds life on the ship very different from life with the nuns. A little old lady with a penchant for booze and matchmaking seems determined to lead Mary astray; a swarve, exotic-looking Cambridge University student (with the decidedly unexotic name of George Jones) seems to want to give her the world. He offers to take Mary to see The Great Pyramid; introduces her to expensive Champagne, but there must be strings attached, surely? Perhaps George has a few skeletons of his own. Set in the 1930s, The Passenger is a coming of age story. Mary is forced to grow up PDQ. From infatuation to cringeworthy drunken antics to the downright dangerous, this tragic comedy tells the tale of a young adult treading the tightrope from adolescence to womanhood; of identities lost, borrowed and found.
